Notes about what I had to change:

- Originally in my wireframes, I planned to have the courses listed underneath the term name. I ran into the problem of dynamically adding classes, but when I found out that they always needed 6 classes and I couldn't find a great way to dynamically make a box that was bound to two sources (terms and courses), I decided to make a Terms page and Term's Courses page.

- I originally had a active switch for courses as well, as I somehow missed that it needed to be a picker with more options than just active and inactive.

- I wanted to have a settings page to be able to activate and deactivate all notifications, but realized that it would requiring saving them in a database in a weird way. I decided, it would be better for a user to be able to edit when they wanted to get a notification from the specific term, course, or assessment and be able to view that from their respective view pages.

This is the home page where it displays courses that have been marked as 'in progress' in the marked active term.
You can edit, delete or view the courses from this page.

All Edit Notification buttons go to this page where you can set a notification for start and end of a term, course, or assessment.

If you click edit notification at the bottom of the Course Page you can set the alerts for the course.
If you scroll down you can click 'edit notifications' for both the objective and performance assessments.

View the six classes in the term when you click 'view courses'. You can set a course from here, as well as view the course details, edit the course, or delete it.

Add/Edit Course

You can either add/edit (or both) courses from multiple pages. From the home page, while viewing a term's courses, while viewing an instructor's courses, or from the course page.

Notes about functionalities:

All dates and times are date or timepickers.

You can only delete an instructor if all their courses have been deleted.

The switches next to active, mark a term as active.

You have press set on the term's courses in order to see the start/end date and for the ability to edit/delete/view the course.

Switches next to dates indicate whether a notification has been turned on.

The course status can be selected via a picker to mark it as: -in progress -completed -dropped OR -plan to take.

Notifications can be cancelled if you edit the notification again and toggle the switch off.

A class needs to be made before it can be selected on the course picker on view term courses page.

Switches can only be toggled on the edit pages, except on the terms page.

There are back arrows set on the top bar instead of specific back buttons.
